

Stakeholder	Power	Interest	Status	Why
Client Stakeholder / Merchant Leaders	High	High	Manage Closely	They were the external decision-maker and final acceptance stakeholder. The project existed because they needed the partner portal to onboard 200 franchise locations.
CEO	High	High	Manage Closely	The CEO had executive approval authority, was tied to the strategic revenue upside, and even rejected the initial demo—so their influence on project success was very high.
Head Developer	High	High	Manage Closely	They led the technical work breakdown and were critical to whether the portal could actually be designed, integrated, and delivered on time.
Development Team	Medium	High	Keep informed	They were deeply involved in execution and day-to-day delivery, so interest was high. Their power is lower than the head developer or CEO because they didn't have final approval authority, but they still materially affected delivery.
Operations Team	Medium	High	Keep informed	They had a strong stake in the onboarding workflow, MID practicality, and portal usability. They likely didn't control strategic approval, but they had meaningful influence over whether the solution worked operationally.
Sales Team	Medium	Medium	Keep satisfied	They mattered for the demo narrative and commercial positioning, but they weren't primary decision-makers for the build itself. Their interest was real, but not as high as dev, ops, or the client.
Client Relations / PM Lead	High	High	Manage Closely	I was coordinating stakeholders, driving timeline management, running standups, and owning communication and acceptance flow.
